DEMONSTRATION REPORT

Computer security review

Demonstration sample. Illustrative data, not a client report.

Fictional device: CedarBook Pro / Windows 11 Pro 25H2

Agreed scope

- Owner-guided screen-share review of one personal laptop.
- Updates, firewall, built-in protection, encryption, user accounts and startup items.
- Remote-access software, browser extensions and available account sign-in history.
- No disk imaging, memory capture, enterprise tenant audit or destructive testing.

Review methods

Configuration panels, installed software lists, startup entries and available security logs were reviewed with the fictional owner. File contents were not opened.

Findings and basis

Priority	Area	Finding	Basis
High	Remote access	An unused remote-support tool still starts automatically.	Startup list and service status show the tool enabled.
Medium	Disk encryption	Device encryption is enabled; the recovery key location has not been confirmed.	System panel reports protection on; owner could not verify key storage.
Medium	Browser extension	A coupon extension can read and change data on all websites.	Extension permissions show access to every site.
Low	Local accounts	A dormant standard user account remains present.	Account list shows no recent sign-in information.

Priority recommendations

- Confirm the remote-support tool is no longer needed, then uninstall it and verify its service is removed.
- Store the encryption recovery key in an owner-controlled secure location and test that it can be retrieved.
- Remove the coupon extension or restrict site access if the browser supports it.
- Confirm ownership of the dormant account before disabling or deleting it.

Changes completed

- No changes were applied; this sample represents a review-only engagement.

Remaining actions and limitations

- Run the built-in offline scan after current work is saved.
- Work or school accounts may require administrator approval for deeper review.
- No forensic timeline or definitive compromise determination was produced.

Demonstration sample. Illustrative data, not a client report.